Understanding the other

On their golden anniversary, a couple were kept busy all day with the celebrations and the crowds of relatives and friends who dropped in to congratulate them. So they were grateful when, towards evening, they were able to be alone in the porch, watching the sunset and relaxing after a tiring day. The old man fondly gazed at his wife and said, "Agatha, I am proud of you." "What was that you said? asked the old lady. "You know I am hard of hearing. Say it louder." The man repeated, "Agatha," I said, "I am proud of you." "That is alright," she replied with a dismissive gesture, "I am tired of you too." Alas, we don't hear, or try to understand what the other is saying. –What would happen today if the leaders of the world had a divinely inspired, wise and understanding heart? Wouldn't it be good if we were to pray for wisdom and insight to understand the true meaning of our relationships?
