So how is this community working together? What are we doing to break down the individualism that keeps us from growing more like Jesus? How are we collectively expressing care and love for the larger society, thereby manifesting the love of God for humanity? These are painful questions. Are poor people being helped by our work? Would people suffering from injustice realise that we will be their allies? Do people caring for the planet know that they have support from us as a group? Would people who are victimised or excluded in our society know that Christians will stand up for them? Have we become so individualistic and so consumerist in our attitudes that we imagine we can be Christians and ignore such questions?
