Reflection: Giving God's blessing to another is not dependent on greater holiness and even less on greater self-composure at that moment. It is as though it were the reverse. Carrying (or attempting to carry) another person is not contingent upon the greater physical or spiritual strength of the man or woman who carries. A God of grace does not work in this way. Pain, grief and even near-desperation may be the elements that God will use for the genuine carrying and blessing of another person. - Richard Clarke, "Shouldering the Lamb", (Dublin: Dominican Publications), p. 19.

Readings this weekend: The Transfiguration: The cross requires the exodus of Jesus, his death, resurrection and glorification. The disciples have to realise that he must depart, just as they are now prepared for his going up to Jerusalem to die.
